Reputation.

Long years ago when life was new And hope's benign creation's bright-When fancy's wildest dreams seem'd true, And promis'd all supreme delight-

I loved all forms that walk the earth, Creation's fair and countless birth; But ah! that warmth is gone forever, Again so love them, shall I nevet. When first the minstrels harp was strung

To sing the Spanish heroes' glory, Hesperia's mountain's proudly flung In joyful echoes back the story-The welcome strain is heard no more, The song is hush'd, the triumph o'er-Fame, truth and honor all forgot, The bard himself remember'd not.

Oh! once how loud my praise resounded, From crowds that throng'd my honored way, When from his throne the monarch bounded

And paid his homage to my lay ;-The courtiers tongue is silent now, The monarch's form is cold and low-Deep in that grave where soon shall be, All that remains of hope and me.

The youth of Spain once gather'd round me, And all but worshipp'd when they came;

And poured out blessings on my name-The laurel wither'd where it grew, And he who Spain's first honors knew And kindled high her glory's fires,

In want, and woe, and wail, expires.
